Discuss Poultry Exhibit For South Arkansas Fair

September Meeting of the County Association Was Held Monday Night

NEW EXHIBIT HALL

Poultry Exhibit Will Be in Old Agricultural Building This Year

A large crowd was in attendance at the September meeting of the Hempstead County Poultry association, which met Monday night at the city hall, in Hope.

This being the last meeting before the Southwest Arkansas Fair, most of the discussions pertained to getting the birds ready for the poultry show in connection with the fair. Several have expressed belief that on account of the prolonged drought throughout this section the agricultural exhibits may not be up to standard and it is a desire of the fair management to overcome this possible shortage with a better poultry show than ever.

In the past a creditable showing has been made with poultry in connection with the fair, but there has been one objectionable feature. That is, the poultry building. The poultry department has always been located in an out of the way place and consequently many who attended the fair left without even seeing this feature of the exhibits. This year, however, this objection has been overcome, a new agricultural exhibit hall has been built and the old hall has been converted into a modern poultry exhibit building. This feature alone will give the poultry exhibitors more publicity and a better display than ever that is predicted by poultry enthusiasts.

A. P. A. Judge

Another feature of the fair in the interest of the poultry exhibitors is, that this year an American Poultry Association judge will be used to judge the birds. Homer W. Pligg, secretary-manager of the fair, who attended the meeting Monday night informed the association that the services of Miss Sarah Jane York, an A. P. A. judge of Mena, Ark., had been engaged and that Miss York had wired him she would be here. There are several, in fact many individuals who know how to judge poultry, but they are not affiliated with the American Poultry association, hence the exhibitor does not receive any credit outside of his immediate neighborhood for having birds of real quality. When an A. P. A. judge passes on a pen or individual display, the owner knows that his prize winners are good enough to compete in any poultry show.

Several visitors from Nevada county were present at the meeting Monday night. Those who spoke were A. A. Gordon and H. E. Thornton, both of these gentlemen have been exhibiting birds at the Southwest Arkansas Fair for several years and they predicted a large number of birds from the Nevada county association would be brought here this month.

At the business session of the meeting the local association and seven members joined the State Poultry association. Election of officers for the state association is to be held the 15th of this month. H. E. Thornton of Prescott, one of the superintendents of the poultry department of the Southwest Arkansas Fair, a member of the Hempstead County association and a poultry enthusiast is a candidate for secretary of the Arkansas Poultry association. All associations are anxious that he be elected.

In speaking Monday night Mr. Thornton announced that all birds brought to the fair which were not discussed would not be entered. He also stated that the management would not receive any poultry after midnight Monday, September 22.

Members of the county association who are superintendents of the poultry department are Mrs. Charles Locke, Ozark; A. H. Wade, Blevins and H. E. Thornton, Prescott.

Business Club Use Legion Golf Course

Many Players Are Visiting Course This Week to Assist Club

The American Legion miniature golf course management has extended to the Hope B. & P. W. club the use of its facilities for this week and many players are taking advantage of this form of amusement.

The business and professional women, always alive to all civic projects realize the need of establishing an educational fund with which worthy boys and girls could be aided and are bending every effort to do this so that it may begin functioning during the present school year. This is only one of their objectives but they must have the cooperation of the citizens of Hope and the surrounding community to attain them. We are very sure this will be freely given.

Tickets may be obtained from any member of the club or at the golf course.

Urges Action On Bridge Explosion

CAMDEN, Sept. 9.—(AP)—Urging the federal government to assist in solving the mystery connected with the blowing up of the new Garland City highway bridge, Congressman Tilman B. Curaway, Congressman Otis Wingo, and Governor Parnell.

Congressman Parks was strong in denunciation of the crime and said that he will do all in his power to help solve the mystery. He also urged the Texarkana Chamber of Commerce to call a mass meeting, which he will attend, to consider plans for rebuilding of the bridge.

Farmer Displays Good Cotton Stalk Here

M. Beck, farmer living south of Shover Springs, eight miles from Hope on the J. M. Harbin farm, today brought to town an unusually good cotton stalk for any year.

The stalk was of the Acacia variety and contained 72 grown bolls. Mr. Beck said he did not pull the stalk especially to bring to town, but that it was pulled up by a hay rake and he just brought it in to show. He says he has 15 acres of this variety.

Coste and Bellonte Are Acclaimed By President Hoover

President Terms French Fliers Flight as Return of Lindbergh's

WARM RECEPTION

Visit Tomb of Unknown Soldier During Visit in Washington

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—(AP)—President Hoover expressed Monday to Dieudonne Coste and Maurice Bellonte the feeling of the United States that their Paris to New York flight returned the visit made to France by Charles A. Lindbergh.

At the White House before the state luncheon he gave in their honor, the president recalled "the 30 hours and more of intense emotion that gripped us while our own Colonel Lindbergh was winging his way to Paris."

"Today, therefore," he said, "every American knows exactly what pride and happiness possess every French heart; at the knowledge that these two gallant sons of France stand safely on our soil."

The achievements of Coste and Bellonte and Lindbergh were linked by Hoover with those of two of America's other famous airmen, Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd and Captain "Eddie" Rickenbacker, World war ace. All were his guests at the luncheon.

A quiet moment of reverence was spent at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier Monday by Dieudonne Coste and Maurice Bellonte before the state luncheon at the White House honoring their westward crossing of the Atlantic.

Their wreath of tribute was laid at Arlington while an army bugler sounded taps. The army band had played by Marseillaise while the airmen walked through the memorial amphitheater to the tomb. They saw the dome of the capitol and the Washington monument through the mist in the distance.

Coste and Bellonte appeared greatly refreshed by a restful night at the French embassy. The trips to Arlington and various government departments were made in automobiles which traveled at such a pace that the foreign visitors were seldom recognized.

Lindbergh greeted the fliers at the commerce department along with Secretary Lamont and Assistant Secretary Young.

"Good morning, glad to see you," he said.

Coste, beaming, replied "How are you?" in English.

Young asked the aviators whether they could tell anything of their plans for a good will flight over various states and was told:

"Nothing yet."

Coste and Bellonte chatted with Secretary Adams at the navy department for about five minutes. Rear Admiral Moffet, chief of the bureau of aeronautics, and Admiral Charles F. Hughes, chief of operations, also greeted the fliers.

Riot Is Prevented By Soldiers As Food Is Unloaded

SANTO DOMINGO, Sept. 9.—(AP)—Furnishing of food and water to Santo Domingo stricken thousands became more of a problem.

The soldiers held them off and speakers told them that they would be fed as soon as the food was transferred to a distributing point. Most of those who tried to participate in the riot had not eaten since Wednesday, the day the storm struck.

Nashville May Get Hempstead District

Will Vote on Consolidation of District Next Thursday

NASHVILLE, Sept. 9.—A special school election has been called to be held in Rural Special District No. 23 of Hempstead county Thursday of this week, the election to be on the question of consolidation with the Nashville Special District.

This special district was formed some time ago by the consolidation of the Goodlett, Yancy and Sanders districts, and when the special election was held in Nashville recently on consolidation with the Hempstead county districts, this district was included in the question voted on by the local people and no further election will be necessary in Nashville. It had been intended to hold the election in No. 23 on the same day as the election in the other district but dissection arose, and it was postponed until an agreement could be reached by the people of the district as to what was the best course to pursue.

It is said now that a majority of the people believe consolidation with the Nashville district is the best solution of their school problem, and the election has been called.

Most of the high school pupils of the territory embraced in the district have received their education in the Nashville high school for many years, and the consolidation will only mean that high school pupils will have free tuition in the school here and free transportation to and from school. It is proposed to maintain the present school of that district and transport the pupils to the grade school, which will probably be located at the site of the Goodlett school.

Railways Will Aid Drouth Victims

To Let Tie Contracts Far in Advance of Regular Schedule

LITTLE ROCK, Sept. 9.—(AP)—State drouth relief committee after a conference Monday announced that the Kansas City Southern Railroad company officers and the Frisco railroad had agreed to advance the letting of cross-tie contracts so as to give work immediately to many unemployed as a measure to aid in the present drouth emergency.

The Kansas City Southern, said a letter from its president, C. E. Johnston, would let a part of its tie contracts for 1932 at an early date, thus moving up production on such supplies by a year. The Frisco railroad will let its contracts January 1, its officials said, thus advancing by about a year much work for unemployed along its lines.

T. Weed Harvey, assistant chief of the co-operative extension division of the United States department of agriculture, spoke to the drouth committee Monday, recounting the governmental activities toward alleviating drouth conditions.

Kentucky Greet Hempstead Melon

Waldo (Ark.) Man Ships 120-Pounder to Bowling Green Teacher

Hempstead county world champion watermelons invaded another state last week.

The Bowling Green (Ky.) News carried the following story last week: "Just to show Bowling Green people how big watermelons grow in the neighborhood of Hope, Ark., W. R. Blair, of the Ritchie Grocer company at Waldo, Ark., has shipped a 120-pound melon to George V. Page, member of the faculty of Western Teachers College (Bowling Green)."

The Bowling Green story continues at considerable length, in a prominent position in that newspaper—but the detailed story is told in a letter which the Kentucky man wrote to Mr. Blair at Waldo, after the melon arrived and was shown in Bowling Green.

"It was really surprising," writes Mr. Page, "to see the number of people that stopped and came into see it. At one time traffic became so jammed that the police were called to that section to straighten it out. It is estimated that three or four thousand persons visited the display."

"We invited our friends to help us eat the melon today (Labor Day). About twenty were expected, so after due council Mr. Allen decided to get two other large (?) melons so that we could all have plenty. I believe twenty-five finally took part, and all had as much melon as they could eat and the two large (?) melons were not touched. You see, even with the melon before our eyes it was still difficult for us to realize how much melon was there."

"There are many who would like to know the name of this melon and quite a few want seed. In fact I have referred some to you for seed."

A Symptom of Defeat

NEWSPAPER headlines are occasionally humorous without meaning to be.

A Chicago newspaper, for instance, recently carried the proud front-page headline: "Two gangsters jailed under vagrancy act." There is a laugh in that headline, somehow, but the thoughts it excites are not, after all, very funny, if you stop to consider them long enough.

The story under this headline related how two Chicago gangsters had been picked up by the police and lodged in cells. Unable to think of any other charge to put against the police finally lodged vagrancy charges against them, and the men were sentenced to six months imprisonment apiece.

Now all of that, good material for a humorous columnist, is nevertheless rather dismaying. For what it amounts to is a confession of defeat on the part of a great American city—a confession that it is only by resorting to roundabout, funny-sounding modes of procedure that the police can take any satisfactory action against two very dangerous hoodlums.

The gangsters of Chicago are notorious the world over. Any newspaperman, any police officer, any well-informed citizen can name for you the leaders in the city's crime rings and can give you a fair idea of the murders and illegal business deals they have been involved in. But can Chicago arrest any of these men for any of these crimes and make the charges stick? Chicago cannot—and hence, with unconscious humor, it puts two hoodlums behind the bars as vagrants!

In reality, this is as ominous a symptom as American municipal government has displayed in years. It comes close to being a confession of utter helplessness. When a great American city can proceed against its crooks only by having the law on them for vagrancy, its administration of criminal justice has all but broken down.

Education in Arkansas

THERE is a pointer for Missouri in the strides which have been taken by Arkansas in the past few years to pull herself out of the ignominious forty-eighth place in the American educational scale. On the basis of statistics quoted by Claude M. Hirst, state superintendent of public instruction, our southern neighbor must already have left the foot of the class. Her legislation is even now in the van, and only time is now required to wipe out her cruel stigma of illiteracy.

Arkansas' school progress is best epitomized in the statement that, since 1920, 5,118 school districts have been reduced by consolidation to 3,478, and by September 1, we are assured, that number will fall below 3,000.

Two facts impress us with the sincerity of Arkansas' effort to improve her schools—progressive legislation and the demonstrated willingness of the people to tax themselves.

An equalization fund law was put through in 1927, but a gigantic lobby defeated appropriations to make it effective. Two years later the lobby was defeated. New and substantial sources of revenue have been provided. And amendment to the constitution authorizing districts to tax themselves 18 mills instead of 12 was adopted by popular vote in 1925, and already 65 per cent of the districts, including 90 per cent of school children, have taxed themselves to that limit. Last year $3,854,710 was spent for school buildings as against $656,000 in 1924.

Arkansas not only wants better education and more of it, but she is willing to pay the price.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

One Daily Poem

I'VE paid for all the children's books; my wallet now is flat. The publishers are plainly crooks to charge a price like that. When we were in the seventh grade our books cost just a dollar, and if a nickel more we paid we made an awful holler. We didn't study hygiene then, not other fancy courses; the three R's were our grand amen and wisdom's only sources. We didn't need a five-foot shelf to hold our book collection. We bought a book each for himself and that's my recollection. But now they give to every child a laundry list of books that drives the father simply wild as o'er the list he looks. He buys the books and pays the bill, anticipates a great event—he hopes that some day Johnny will become the nation's president.—Ozark Moon column of the Fayetteville Leader.

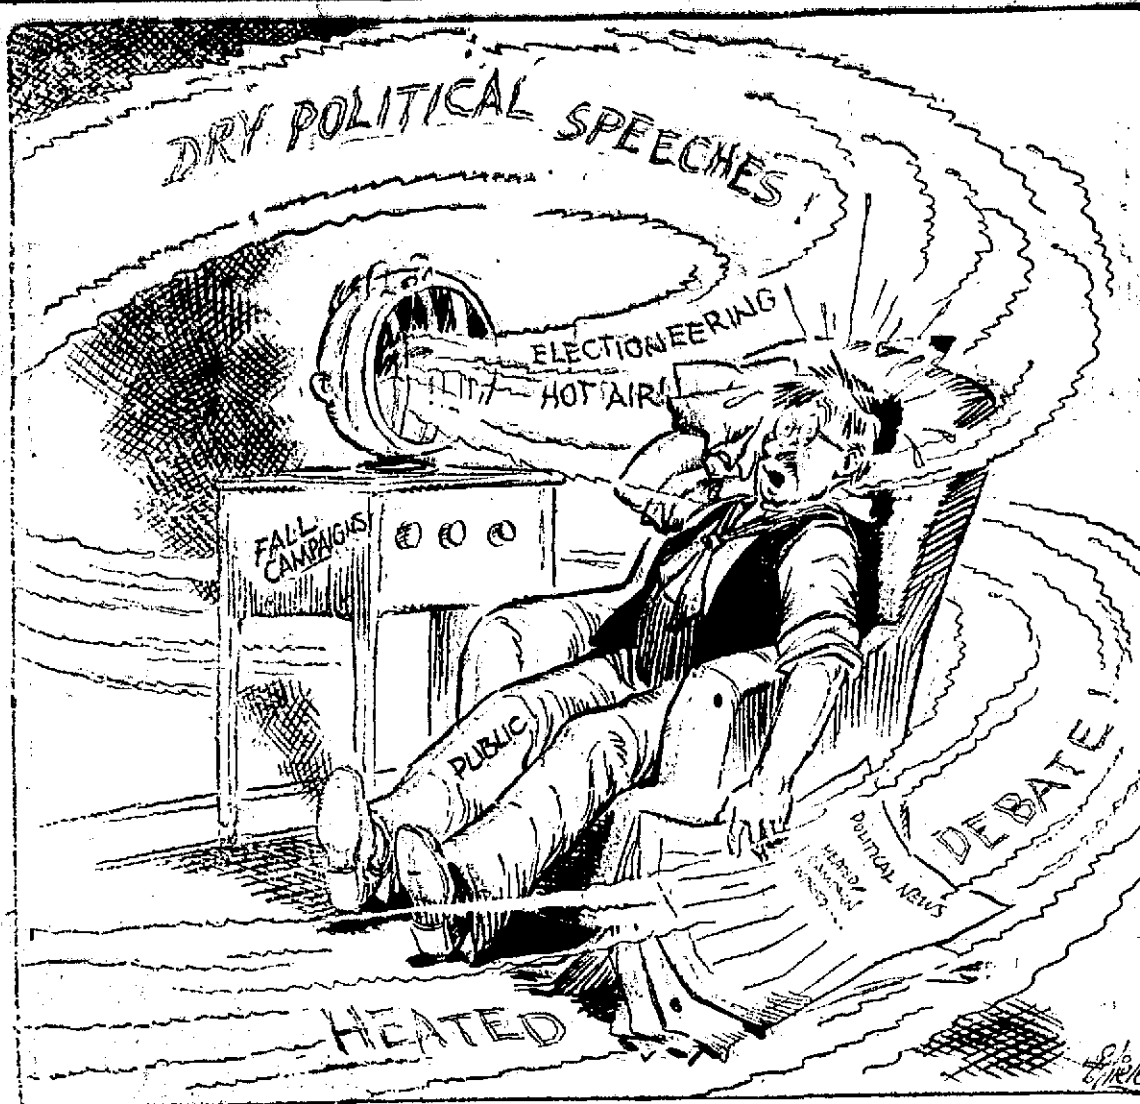

Unrest in South America

POLITICAL conditions in South America have been stable for a good many years; consequently it is more than ordinarily discouraging to read of revolts, threatened or actual, of two countries at the same time.

In Peru the revolt seems to be an established fact, and there is more than an even chance—judging from the cables—that the deposed president, Leguia, will suffer in the traditional Latin-American way.

Just at present it is not quite clear what is happening in Argentina; but it is quite evident that there is a very menacing situation for the government there. Argentina has generally been considered the foremost nation in South America, judged by our own standards. It is dismaying to see it lapsing into the habit of armed revolt.

Shucks! The Real "Drouth" is Only Commencing!

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

NCA Service Writer

WASHINGTON—The downfall

of President Augusto Leguia, dictator of Peru and Uncle Sam's best boy friend in South America, is strictly in accord with the old political adage that prosperity absorbs all criticism and that the less prosperity the more criticism.

That goes in any country and the stronger the factions are which oppose the administration the farther it goes in effecting a change of government.

In the United States, which has been going through a protracted period of depression, there is a real chance that the Democratic party will obtain control of one or both houses of Congress in the November elections. In any event there will be more Democrats in both the Senate and the House.

It's Tough on Hoover

Instead of giving the Hoover administration a vote of confidence and a grip on Congress the voters are virtually certain to make things harder for it by strengthening anti-administration coalitions. If Hoover himself were running for re-election this year he would find some rough going and as it is he probably is glad that things are done differ-ently here from the way they are in Peru. Few presidents have had to bear up under such a period of harsh criticism during their first year or two in office and a great deal of it has been due to the depression which gripped the United States, along with Peru and many other countries.

Anti-government agitation is reported to be on the increase in two or three other Latin-American countries, encouraged by unsatisfactory economic conditions, although there is as yet no information here which indicates the likely success of any movement such as upset Leguia.

Peru exports cotton, wool, oil and sugar, and the prices of all these commodities have lately been lowered in the general world depression of values. Exports and imports have gone into serious declines. It seems too far-fetched to connect the passage of our Grundy tariff act with a revolution in Peru, but it may be pointed out that the new rates on imports into the United States struck the rest of the world at an especially bad time and led many countries to consider themselves likely to be just so much worse off.

When the slump came, Leguia was up to his neck in a costly program of development and expansion. He had established himself as boss of Peru and laid a system of heavy taxes on the country to pay for the rebuilding and modernization of Lima, the development of the port of Callao, extensive road-building and school programs and other ambitious improvements. The 1929 budget of nearly $70,000,000 was the largest in the history of Peru and a considerably larger one was passed for 1930.

Leguia had also run his coun-

In life, as you meet with your troubles, encounter them all like a man; Don't make a parade of your feelings, 'Tis better to laugh if you can,— Yes, wiser to live a delusion And jest in the throngs of the gay Than losing all heart in the struggle, To mop in the shadowy ways. The bearing of burdens serenely And braving of issues toiling Is truer to self than bewailing Your power and purpose awning. Your tears will not drive away shadows And signing no comfort can reap. Chinese Cowboy Now In Retirement

George Taylor, Adopted By Rancher, Once Fought Indian Rustlers

CUT BANK, Mont., Sept. 9.—(UP)—Only a fair bronco rider but a wizard at driving a four horse team was George Taylor, the only Chinese cowboy in the annals of Montana, who now has put away the black snake whip for a garden hoe on his little ranch here.

Taylor's Chinese name was forgotten when he was adopted in 1855 by Jesse F. Taylor, owner of a big cattle outfit known as the S. T. brand, located near Helena. The boy had been brought to Helena. The boy had been mother who died that year, leaving the five year old stranded.

The wealthy rancher sent the boy through school and then put him to work on the ranch as a cow hand. While still in his twenties, Taylor was entrusted with a drive of 1,000 cattle from Helena to Choteau, at that time the agency for the Blackfeet Indians.

The outfit was encamped for the night at the present site of Wolf Creek. A band of a dozen Blackfeet who had jumped the reservation to steal horses took every horse on the drive during the night.

Taylor and two of his cowboys, Louis Morgan and Jim Fisher, set out on the marauder's trail afoot. They overtook the Indians, shot and scalped two of them and recovered the horses.

Young Taylor then followed the roundup for ten years. He was known as a most dependable teamster in the days when the prairie was without charted routes and a driver picked his way by landmarks, frequently crossing deep coulees and washouts. All of the countless adventures of the early west were Taylor's until he settled down to stock ranching in 1878. He had been clawed by a grizzly on a hunting expedition, saved from the swollen waters of the Marias river and another time had the brim of his hat perforated in the shooting up of a saloon.

While spending the night in a small cabin in the Sun River country with a small hunting party, Taylor and his friends were awakened by a grinding of the logs in the cabin. The party found a herd of buffalo rubbing and jostling for an opportunity to scratch themselves on the rough logs. The cabin swayed alarmingly until the buffalo were stampeded by shots in the air and the barking of the dogs.

Taylor took up stock ranching on a small scale not far from the present Custer highway. He once owned several hundred cattle and sheep. He married a young woman of Swedish ancestry and their ranch home became one of the show places of the locality. He has three sons living, two engaged in sheep ranching and a third a sailor in the United States Navy. Since his wife's death, Taylor has been living at Cut Bank. He is 80 years old.

Joyous Foot Bath Then Lift Out CORNS

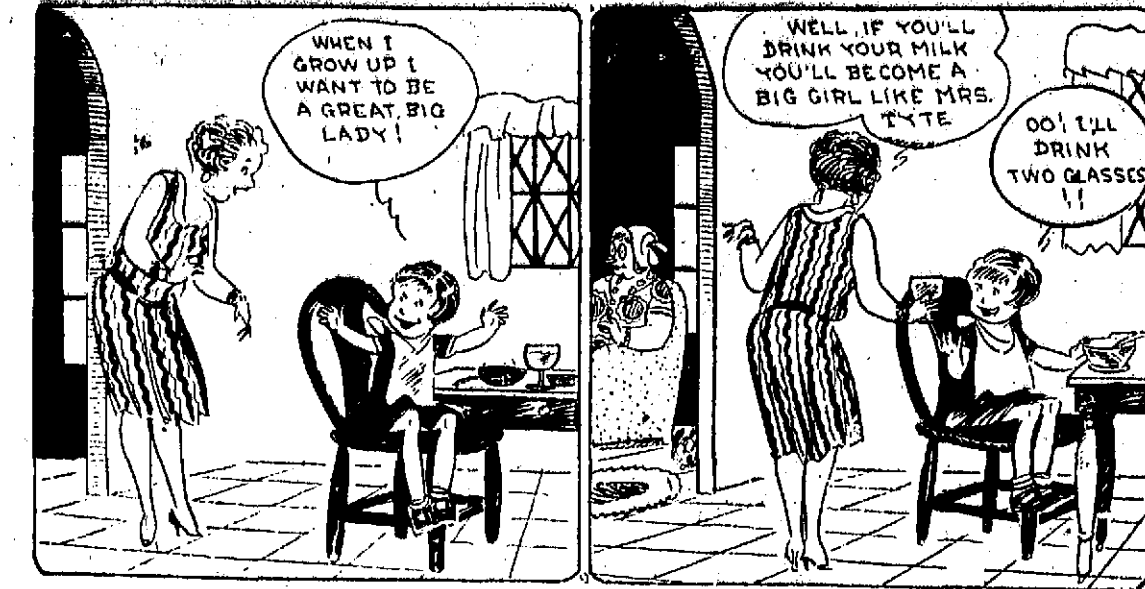

Root and All—Out to Stay Two tablefuls of that amazing Radox to one gallon of water makes a footbath which after 3 or 4 night's soaking lifts out aching, maddeningly refreshing and foot invigorating corns, callouses, too—root and all.

Radox softens the hard outer-layers of corn—and oxygen which Radox liberates, enters the pores, each night penetrating further and further, carrying the salts right to root of corn which can be lifted out bodily.

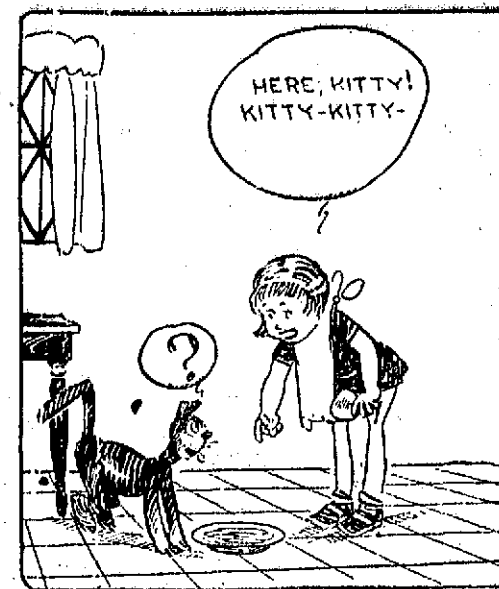

Wonderful to take out pain and burning and refresh tired feet! Get a package of Radox at Ward & Son or Bryant's Drug Store, or any drug store and know the joyous comfort of corn and callous free feet—Radox is the modern, scientific method to remove corns which completely eliminates old fashioned plasters, dangerous cutting, skin destroying acids and obnoxious methods.

Things to Be Worked Out

One of the interesting subjects coming up for discussion when the winter sports league gets under way is the monetary arrangement to be made for next year between the Cleveland Indians and a young man named Wesley Ferrell.

A Bargain

Last year he won 21 games for the Indians in his first year in the majors, and I understand his pay envelope contained only $2,000. After the season closed, young Mr. Ferrell became most moderate on the subject of stipend.

Whitehill's String

After winning 11 straight games, beating every team in the American League except the St. Louis Browns, Earl Whitehill finally was stopped by the lowly St. Louisans. The catch in that

DID YOU KNOW THAT—

MOST of the people who raised Bill Tilden at Erie were girls. . . the Davis Cup trophies say French officials are just a lot of beluga. . . they ignored the fact that players were not ready for service, when the players were Americans. . . foot-fault judges refused to penalize a French player who repeatedly violated the law. . . even when ordered by the official referee, the foot-fault judge wouldn't penalize the offender. . . the gallery at Stade Roland Garros was said to be violently partisan. . . but that's not strange, in the light of the American gallery's antics at Germantown in 1927 when the French won the cup. . . next year neutral officials will be imported.

one is that Bucky Harris gave his star southpaw an extra day of rest to let him face the Browns at home, instead of pitching to the Athletics in Philadelphia. Bucky thought Whitehill would have a better chance to prolong his winning streak by working on the Browns than if he started against the Mackmen. But the Browns suddenly became most savage and snapped Earl's streak by a 5 to 4 score.

Before Whitehill started on his amazing string, he had come to be regarded as something of an eye-sore on the mound in Detroit, losing nine out of his first 12 efforts. Uncle Frank Navin had offered him to this one and that one around the league in exchange for a good five-cent cigar.

Then suddenly the young man boldly beat the Athletics. Five days later he gave the White Sox four hits. They sent him in against Washington next and he smacked the Senators, 3 to 2. From then on it appeared that Whitehill didn't know when to quit pitching. Until the Browns came to town and spoiled every-

Girl Champ Wants to Compete For Uncle Sam In 1932

STELLA WALSH

Stella Walsh, champion sprinter, is racing American naturalization laws to qualify for the American Olympic team in 1932. She has filed her citizenship papers, but she won't be 21 until 90 days before the world meet.

LEVLAND, Sept. 6.—Just now

Stella Walsh's big race is with Uncle Sam's naturalization laws.

The 19-year-old sprinting stenographer can outrun any woman in the world—and most men, but that doesn't concern her for the moment.

Her big problem is to become a citizen of the United States so she may realize her ambition to represent America in the 1932 Olympiad at Los Angeles.

But to qualify she must become a citizen—and she won't be 21, the necessary age, until 90 days before the Olympic meet.

Already she has entered the race against time by filing citizenship papers. At present she is a citizen of Poland, although she's lived in this country since she was 10 months old.

Her real name is Walasiewicz, which she seldom uses.

Stella will represent Poland in two European meets this summer, athletic authorities having decided such action would not injure her eligibility for the American team in 1932.

Stella holds four world records and is co-holder of two others: 50-yard dash, 6 seconds; 220-yard dash, 26.1 seconds; 45-yard dash 5.6 seconds; 60 meters, 7.2 seconds; 60-yard dash, 7 seconds (co-holder); 40-yard dash, 5.2 seconds (co-holder).

Miss Walsh hopes to become a physical instructor, complete night school and attend college. She is employed in the freight accounting department of the New York Central railroad here.

As a child, the girl won foot races at picnics, but did not attract attention until she represented South Side high school in a meet in which she says "about 4,000 other girls" were entered. She won all the important running events.

Then she went to work for the railroad and began rapid improvement as a runner for the road's athletic club. Stella practices three times a week. She is coaching a 16-year old sister to run.

The good-looking, athletically built Polish girl is 5 feet 6 inches tall, and weighs 135 pounds. She is in bed every night usually around 10 o'clock. Stella likes to play a ukulele, and her mother says she is a good cook. But as for "boy friends," Stella says there "aren't any."

Payless Job Lures Morgan-Partner

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 5.—(AP)—

Thomas S. Gates is "grateful" for the chance to resign a partnership in four of the world's greatest banking houses for a job without salary—and see nothing extraordinary in his actions.

Gates resigned as partner of J. P. Morgan & Co., New York; Drexel & Co., Philadelphia; Morgan, Grenfell & Co., London and Morgan & Cie, Paris, to be president of the University of Pennsylvania.

"A man sincerely interested in any field of activity," says Gates, a man of considerable wealth, "usually develops a constantly increasing desire to devote more and more time to that particular field."

"If he is offered the opportunity to gratify that desire, and he is in a position to take advantage of the opportunity, it is only natural that he should do so."

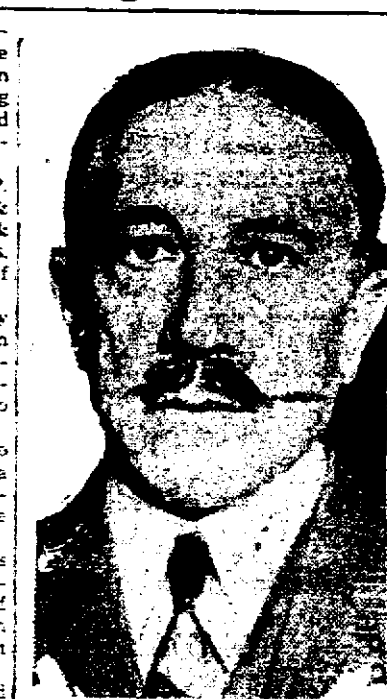

"The opportunity to do this was presented when the trustees honored me by electing me president of the university and I saw no reason why I should not gratefully accept that opportunity."

"Probably because I have devoted many years to work in the financial field there seems to be an impression that I shall be concerned chiefly with the university's financial and administrative affairs. Such is not the case."

"I do not believe it is possible for a man to do effective work in the interest of a university if he loses sight of the primary object for which the institution exists, or if he fails to maintain a thoroughly active interest in every phase of its activity."

"Funds are needed in the conduct of a university just as they are needed for the maintenance of all other institutions, and to see that those funds are obtained and wisely administered is essential."

"But the fact remains that the principal object of a university is to provide higher education and as a matter of plain common sense I fail to see how I or any other man, could hope to function efficiently as head of a university without being constantly and thoroughly concerned with its academic work."

HARD WORKING

TIMBER MAN

Tells How He Was Relieved

of Blinding Headaches by Taking Black-Draught.

Hopkinsville, Ky.—"I have been a user of Black-Draught for about twenty-four years, and it is about the only medicine I take at all," says Mr. Edgar Gamble, of 116 Fowler Avenue, this city.

"If I have the headache or feel the need of a purgative, I take Black-Draught. It is easy to take and quick to relieve."

"I used to have dull headaches, my eyes would burn and when I would stoop over I seemed to turn blind. This isn't much of a good feeling when one has to work, and I have had to work hard in my time, being a timber man. This work takes me from home a good deal, and one never likes to get sick, especially away from home. I found the best way to avoid this was to take an occasional dose of Black-Draught, and keep the system cleaned."

"I tell all it is a splendid, reliable medicine."

"Thousands of others have written to tell how many disagreeable symptoms, due to constipation, have gone away after they had taken Black-Draught."

The Hollywood Story

by NEA SERVICE, Inc. by ERNEST LYNN

BEGIN HERE TODAY

Beginning as an extra, ANNE WINSTON, an ambitious young actress from Tulsa, Okla., has progressed rapidly and is now under contract to Grand National, one of the largest of the Hollywood studios. Anne has been living with five other extras, MRS. MORRISON and EVA HARTLEY. The latter, because of a fragile love experience and her failure to "make the grade," leaves Hollywood and returns to New Orleans.

DAN ROBINSON, former New York newspaper man and now a scenario writer, is in love with Anne, but he has come to regard his feelings for her as a hopeless one, especially since his release from Continental Pictures and his rather unsuccessful attempts to free her.

PAUL COLLIER, who writes a daily movie column for a string of newspapers, shares Dan's sentiment with him. He has great faith in Dan's ability, despite the latter's discouragement. While in New York Dan had written a play for the stage. His agent, unable to place it, sends it back, and Anne and Collier read it and are enthusiastic. They urge Dan to revise it for the movies.

Dan follows their advice. The play eventually is accepted by Grand United, and he is told that he may be offered a contract. Knowing that Anne would like to play a dramatic role, Robinson suggests to studio executives that he be given a test for the leading female part. Therefore she has played roles in which her singing and dancing featured.

CATY STONE is to direct the picture. He gives her a test and is enthusiastic over her voice. He gives the part to her. Stone is the biggest director in Hollywood and Anne naturally is elated over the opportunity. She and Robinson go out together, but Anne is not for a drive. She is so happy, she tells him that she wants to "talk and talk and talk."

where would I have been if it hadn't been for you?"

Dan shrugged. "You mustn't say that. Sooner or later they'd have found out what you're capable of. Why, all I did was to put them to themselves."

Anne gave a little pressure to the hand that was holding her.

RECLINING behind the wheel he gazed up at the sky, and presently he said, without turning his head:

"Anne, how would you like to get married?"

"Why, Dan?" she laughed, "is that a proposal?"

"You're damn right it is."

"Well, I never heard such a casual one in my life. I must say."

"It might sound casual," he said, rolling his head over to look at her, "but there's plenty of stuff behind it."

Anne made a sound with her tongue. "Tch. Slight slant!"

Dan smiled, and then he became suddenly serious. "Now, look here, Anne, tonight's the night we get the record clear. There's no use kidding ourselves any longer. I'm crazy about you and you know it; you've known it for a long time, too. Now what am I going to do about it?"

He waited then for her reply, and Anne said, "Why, Dan," confusedly, "and nothing more." She turned her eyes away and looked troubled.

"There for a while, when things weren't breaking for me, I managed to keep quiet about it, but—"

Anne interrupted him with a vehement shake of her head. "Oh, Dan, that wouldn't have made any difference—not a bit. You just don't understand."

"Well, it did to me; it made a lot of difference. You know, Anne, you told me a little while back that you sometimes thought I didn't care, and that happened—whether I went over or not—but you were wrong. I had plenty of reason for caring."

"What don't I understand?" he asked abruptly.

"Oh, just"—she swung around and faced him—"just that I'm bewildered and don't know what to say." Her wide dark eyes were a worried look. She smiled nervously and repeated: "I don't know what to say."

"Well, it's either yes or no, isn't it?" Dan laughed shortly. "Perhaps you mean you don't want to hurt my feelings—is that it?"

That was not it at all, Anne denied. "I think you're rather cruel to say that, Dan," and she tried to explain then that marriage was something that she thought of only as a dim, far-off prospect; as something probably eventual, but remote from her present scheme. She said, rather apologetically, as though there might be something not exactly normal in the admission, that she had set her mind upon a career, and that perhaps she had made a mistake and let it matter too much.

She tried to smile. "Anyway, Dan, that's the way I feel—it you can make any sense out of what I said. And that's why I've been rather afraid of your saying what you did. I had hoped you wouldn't somehow, until I was sure of myself. I like you, Dan—I like you tremendously. But I'm not at all sure that I'm in love with you."

DAN said, with a shrug and a queer little smile: "Well, if you're not sure, I guess you're not; I think you'd know, all right, if you were," and he pulled out a cigarette and lighted it.

Anne, watching his face, remarked the set look about his mouth and laid a hand earnestly on his arm. "You understand, don't you, Dan?" she asked anxiously. "We needn't be so utterly serious about it, need we?"

He said, "No, we can always be friends," blowing on the end of his cigarette; and the irony of it was almost like a blow to Anne.

But she said nothing, and Dan sensed that she was hurt, and he was contrite.

"I'm sorry, Anne, really. That was a nasty thing to say. I didn't mean it at all."

He saw her eyes then and they shone with unshed tears, and he let his arm rest lightly around her shoulders, and he spoke lightly and jokingly of other things.

But presently the ocean laid its spell on them again and they fell silent, and when Anne stirred unobtrusively, Robinson asked her if she thought it time to go.

She nodded. Dan started the motor. Swinging up the hill to the main road, he made a remark about their "celebration" not having been much of a success. "Sort of a flat tire, wasn't it?"

But he spoke cheerfully enough. He said, "Well, we'll just let it go by default, Anne, and try it again sometime. We'll just forget what happened." He leaned toward her smilingly, and Anne smiled back at him.

Presently he began to whistle, and out of the corner of his eye he looked slyly at her to see if she was taking notice of the song. Anne saw him and she laughed.

"I think you're horrid," she said. "Come on, Anne, sing for me."

"Not that one," she shook her head.

"Come on," he pleaded; "for old times' sake, Anne," and he argued so persuasively and so persistently that finally she consented and closed her eyes and sang:

"Why was I born? Why am I living? Why do I want a thing I don't hope for? What can I hope for? I wish I knew—"

Eyes straight ahead on the road, he drove. Grimly he pressed his foot down on the accelerator, and the night wind tore past them in whispering accompaniment to Anne's song, and it almost snatched a stifled sob from his throat.

"Why do I try to drive you near me?"

Why do I cry?—you never hear me! I'm a poor fool, but I don't care! Why was I born to love you?"

ANNE opened her eyes then and looked at him, and in a moment she glanced at the speedometer and called his attention to it.

Dan smiled and released the pressure of his foot somewhat. He thanked her then for saving him. "Just like old times," he said, and then he talked on rapidly, told her how much her voice had improved, "I wouldn't have believed it. That fellow must be a marvel!"

He said he wondered when production would start on his picture. "What do you think of Lester Moore? Think you'll get along with him all right?" Phillips told me he's a regular guy—no temperament or anything—so you're going to get a chance to do something."

To all of this Anne, knowing that he was acting "unnaturally," and worrying about him, murmured short replies, but when they reached the bungalow she was strangely reluctant to let him go, and she found things to say that would serve as an excuse for him to linger.

And when he did leave, with a promise to see her at the studio on the morrow, she waited at the open door until he had climbed into the car, and then she waved to him and called goodby to him again.

Mona was not yet home and the place suddenly was cheerless. Anne sat down to wait for Mona, and she found herself, for some strange reason, wondering what she would have done if Robinson had again kissed her. She had not expected him to try it, but she wondered nevertheless, because Dan had said something about "old times," referring to their first evening at Santa Monica, and she had not forgotten that it was that night that Dan had kissed her.

Perhaps, she argued to herself, she had not been fair to Dan. If he really cared as much as he seemed to—and she knew that he had been trying to hide part of it from her—she had done wrong in not saying something long before this. She was torn, feeling that she had lost a gay comrade.

Mona came in presently, loud and breezy and cheerful, and they talked; but Anne followed Dan's home in her thoughts.

And Dan, finding the apartment empty when he got there, left immediately and walked down Hollywood Boulevard to Henry's. There he found Paul Collier and Johnny Riddle and a couple of very pretty girls, lingering over coffee and sandwiches; and he joined them. He talked a great deal, and laughed heartily at Johnny Riddle's newest stories; and when the others left he remained and ordered more coffee.

And finally he went home and went to bed.

KONJOLA ADDS 12 POUNDS TO MAN'S WEIGHT

St. Louis Man, Relieved of Painful Stomach Ailment, Eagerly Praises New Medicine

MR. GEORGE FISHER

"I suffered from stomach trouble for a number of months," said Mr. George Fisher, 1346 Cass avenue, St. Louis. Gas formed and I bloated terribly after meals. Pains in the abdominal region caused hours of agony. Extreme nervousness, frightful headaches, and inability to sleep at night had worn me down until I was utterly discouraged.

"A friend had received such wonderful results from Konjola that I was moved to give it a trial. After I had taken six bottles I was amazed at the change brought about in my condition. No more illness for me as long as I can get Konjola. I have gained twelve pounds in weight and my appetite is excellent. Stomach trouble is now a thing of the past and I now enjoy living as a formerly did."

Taken regularly, over a six to eight week period, Konjola is daily doing for thousands all that it did for Mr. Fisher. Certainly such a medicine is worth a trial to sufferers from ailments of the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, and rheumatism, neuritis, and nervousness.

Konjola is sold in Hope, Ark., at Bryant's Drug Store, and by all the best druggists in all towns throughout this entire section.

London Enjoys Bank Holidays

Great Metropolis Deserted By Merry-makers Intent Upon Vacation

LONDON, Sept. 9.—(UP)—Bank holidays are gala occasions with all England on vacation.

While the Londoner may not have any Fourth of July, Labor Day, Thanksgiving Day, or New Year's Day, he does have his Boxing Day, Easter and August Bank holidays, and he makes the most of them.

These days are even more rushing and gay if they come on Friday, Monday or Tuesday, since long weekend results. The recent August Bank Holiday, is an example of the spirit which prevails.

Four million Londoners packed up their sunshades and mackintoshes (English for slickers or raincoats), and descended on resorts like a thundering herd. With their rapid exit, London was left like a city almost forgotten. Buses rattled over empty streets, subways completed entire journeys with only a handful of passengers, eating houses closed their doors, business firms exhibited locked doors, even afternoon newspapers did not appear as alert as usual.

Piccadilly, except for the three old flower women and the odd shoeshining fraternity, was dead during the day. At night people came to attend theatres or cinema houses, but the usual seven, eight and nine o'clock crushes were not there.

The 4,000,000 got away somewhere, even if only to the outskirts of Greater London. Roads, rails, waterways, air and by-paths were alive with Bank holiday pleasure seekers.

Some idea of how London citizens slip away from narrow, crowded streets to the countryside, beach resorts and the Continent can be gained by the special accommodations provided by railroads, motor bus lines, tram lines, shipping lines and airways.

2,500 extra trains were run. 15,000 holiday-makers left Euston and St. Pancras before noon of the first day of the week-end.

95,000 left Paddington. All main line trains were run in triplicate.

Fifty automobiles were taken to Scotland by rail.

Half a million meals were served on trains throughout the country on Saturday.

Trains from King's Cross ran in duplicate and triplicate. Five additional Continental trains ran from Liverpool street station, 22 additional trains left King's Cross, 12 of which went to Scotland.

Every available motor-coach in London, Glasgow, Newcastle, Leeds, Bradford, Sheffield, Manchester, Liverpool, Edinburgh, Nottingham, Leicester and other large cities was called into use.

On Bank Holiday, 160 tramcars an hour were run to Hampstead Heath and Ken Wood. There was a service of 246 tramcars an hour to the Zoo.

Bookings for the air liners on Imperial Airways cross-Channel services were booked days in advance and an augmented service was added.

On the Tilbury to Duxford route to the Continent bookings were so heavy that three boats had to be added.

Extra boats were also run on the Holyhead to Dublin service.

Lakeland and seaside hotels were swamped with bookings and desired reservations.

Harold Lloyd Adopts Playmate for Daughter, Because She Was Lonely at Star's New Estate

Here are little Gloria Lloyd (left), and her adopted playmate, Marjorie Elizabeth Lloyd.

Hollywood, Calif., Sept. 9.—Gloria Lloyd, six-year-old daughter of Harold Lloyd and his wife, Mildred Davis, has a new sister. And the new sister, little Marjorie Elizabeth Lloyd, also is a playmate—as she now is five years of age.

No, the Lloyds haven't been holding out on you, folks. It's just that Marjorie Elizabeth who is better known as Peggy, is an adopted daughter.

Ever since the Lloyds moved into their new mansion in Beverly Hills, Gloria has been pleading for a playmate. When they lived in Hollywood there were several children of Gloria's age in the neighborhood and she had no trouble amusing herself. But the good mother "on his lips," new estate is so large and the neighbors so far away that Gloria was lonesome.

This is the way it all happened. Ms. Lloyd saw little Peggy for the first time last year and liked her so much she asked permission to take her home for a day. And when Harold saw the child he became equally fond of her. Immediately they wanted to adopt her, but Mrs. Louise Sullivan, who then had the child refused to part with her. Back in 1915 Mrs. Sullivan's 18-year-old son died with the words "mother's

"That's a statement I must live up to," vowed Mrs. Sullivan. "I here-vow to God that I will take into my home and mother every homeless child who crosses my path."

Mrs. Sullivan gave up her social servants and devoted her entire time to motherhood on perhaps the largest scale yet attempted. Since that time she has cared for 168 children. But in doing so she spent her entire fortune. So, a few weeks ago, she visited the Lloyd mansion.

"If you still want to adopt Peggy," you may," she told Mrs. Lloyd. "I no longer have enough money to keep her, and I know she will have a good home with you."

So Peggy went to live with the Lloyds and a few days later they started proceedings for her legal adoption.

The most unusual part of it all is that the two children look enough alike to be real sisters. Their hair and eyes are the same color, their complexions match and they have many similar expressions and mannerisms.

And Gloria, as she plays around the big estate, is no longer lonesome.

Shanghai Goes Chicago With Armored Trucks

SHANGHAI, Sept. 9.—(UP)—Shanghai has "gone Chicago."

After centuries of transporting money around the streets in iron boxes borne by two coolies with a pole, bankers have become worried and as a result two armored payroll trucks have just made an appearance.

Both are owned by the Shanghai Commercial & Savings Bank, and it was stated that they were "designed after the pattern of machines used in Chicago and New York," with steel plating protecting all occupants, including the driver.

Where the Hurricane Struck

This map shows the scene of the latest destructive West Indian hurricane to make its presence felt. Sweeping down on Santo Domingo, the blast sped in a northwesterly direction over the Dominican Republic and at last reports was following the same path, with the possibility that it might hit either the northern coast of Cuba or the east shore of Florida.

Names Explained In Yellowstone

Geographic Officials of United States Tell Queer Story

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—(UP)—Thousands of Yellowstone Park tourists who have wondered whence and by what authority came such names as "Old Faithful" geyser and "Broken Egg" spring will find their curiosity gratified by explanations accompanying recent decisions of the United States Geographic Board.

Settling permanently all place names in the park from Abiathar Peak to Young Hopeful Geyser, and chronologically from the earliest French trappers to the latest Dude tourists, the Board's collected decisions tell a strange story of explorers' adventures and tourists' imagination.

The park itself derives its name from the Yellowstone river, known to the Minnetaree Indians as "Mitsi da zi," meaning "rock yellow river," and adopted by early French explorers as "Roche Jaune" or "Yellow Rock."

"Old Faithful" was applied to the most reliable geyser of the Upper Basin by the Washburn Party in 1870 and was the first geyser in the park to receive a name.

The Gashburn Party also named the "Behave," because of the symmetry of its cone, the "Castle," because its cone resembled a partially ruined old feudal castle, and the Grand.

The Gardner river, from whence the official northern entrance to the park takes its name, was "probably named for a trapper."

"Tourists' whimsicality is shown in the naming of 'Factory Hill,' 9,500 feet, supposed to resemble on a frosty morning a factory in an active factory town; and 'Chocolate Pots,' thermal springs having small cones coated with algae and iron, said to look like chocolate.

An Englishman, the Earl of Dunraven, is formally recognized in "Dunraven Peak," 9,700 feet high, named by the United States Geological Survey in 1878 for the Earl, whose European publications on the wonders of the park made them known to the world.

Names which recall famous Americans are Gallatin Range, named for Albert Gallatin, a distinguished statesman in early American history; Mount Sheridan, 10,250 feet, named by Captain J. W. Barlow in 1871 for General P. H. Sheridan, who vigorously supported the effort to preserve the wonders of the park; and Mount Washburn, after General Henry Dana Washburn, leader of the Washburn Party, 1870, who climbed the mountain alone to discover the direction of and route to Yellowstone lake.

Ernest Thompson Seton's famous grizzly "Wahb," who roamed the Yellowstone area, is remembered by Wahb Springs; and a classical reference is found in "Clepsydra," a geyser, so named by the geologist T. B. Comstock in 1873 because like the ancient water clock of that name it marked the passage of time.

New Parts Cost More than a few drops of good oil!

See that your home and office appliances are oiled regularly with "Standard" Household Lubricant

When you buy a sewing machine, a vacuum cleaner, or a typewriter, you expect it to last for many years, perhaps a lifetime. With the proper care, it should. The enemies to guard against are friction and rust. Both are quick to damage the household or office appliance which is not oiled regularly. Then, expensive parts must be replaced, at many times the cost of the few drops of oil, which would have saved them!

"Standard" Household Lubricant is the quality product of a great refinery. It is specially designed to meet the requirements of small motors and generators, and for use wherever a light machine oil is needed. Never gums or corrodes. Convenient 4-oz. squirt can with spout, 25c; 2-oz., bottle, 15c. At your dealer's.
